

Karla Sanders

I live in Alexandra with my husband and two children. I am a former teacher and an experienced project manager, and I co-founded the youth-led charity Sticks 'n Stones, which began in Central Otago and now supports young people across New Zealand through Netsafe.

My background spans governance, education, and complex project delivery. I have served on national boards and advisory groups and am used to working through difficult detail, weighing trade-offs, and asking hard questions when decisions have long-term consequences.

As a member of the Vincent Community Board, I care about practical local outcomes, particularly around infrastructure, planning, and the services people rely on every day. I am focused on helping our community navigate significant local government and legislative change without losing sight of local priorities or voices. I place a strong emphasis on clear, transparent decision-making and communication, so people understand what is changing, why it matters, and how decisions are being made.
